

I am very dismayed with the FCC's removal of ownership limitations now under consideration.

From the beginning of this country it has been recognized that we will only survive if we have a knowledgeable electorate. It doesn't take much to realize that the fewer sources for information one has available the less well informed one will be. And the ownership by one entity of multiple sources of information in a particular geographic location is identical in effect to reducing the overall number of sources.

Don't allow the well of information to be corrupted any further than it already has. Stop the erosion of basic democratic ideals by the flood of unbridled worship at the altar of "shareholder value" before we are drown in useless, vapid infotainment.
